It was powered by fourcylinder petrol, sixcylinder petrol and sixcylinder diesel engines, the latter a first for the 3 Series. The E30 325iX model was the first 3 Series to have allwheel drive. Following the launch of the E36 3 Series in 1990, the E30 began to be phased out. In the 318i, a 1,796 cc 110 cu in version of the M40 was used. The 316i model replaced the 316, using a 1,596 cc 97 cu in version of the M40. The η is an abbreviation for eta, which is used to represent the thermal efficiency of a heat engine. To maximise lowrev torque, the 325e engine was the largest available in an E30 aside from the 333i model, which was only sold in South Africa. The 325e engine had a longer stroke than the 325i version, with a more restrictive head, four cam bearings instead of seven, and single valve springs instead of the dual valve springs used by the 325i version. The front MacPherson struts and rear semitrailing arm suspension were a compact arrangement that left a lot of cabin and boot space for the cars overall size. The semitrailing arms have been criticized for the dynamic toe and camber changes inherent to the suspension geometry, causing bump steer in hard cornering situations such as racing and autocross. The Z3-based BMW M Coupe uses a widened version of the same rear semitrailing arm suspension. Production of the 320i continued until 1991. Sports suspension was fitted to all coupes, and to sedans produced from September 1989. However, the Baur remained on sale, alongside the factory convertible. The M3 convertible was only offered for the European market. The 1987 update models remained largely unchanged until the end of production, with the addition of the 318is model in 1989. Rust protection was improved with the update. Sedan production concluded on April 30, 1991 at Regensburg. PublishDrive. p. 324. ISBN 9781855209602. Retrieved 22 December 2017.
