What Is the Role of the Joint Commission. Why the Joint Commission Is Important for Behavioral and Mental Health How Do Behavioral and Mental Health Providers Receive Joint Commission Accreditation. Most Common Joint Commission Violations for Behavioral and Mental Health Providers Joint Commission Ethics Standards and EHR Compliance Factors Frequently Asked Questions About the Joint Commission The Joint Commission Compliance and EHRs Start Your Free Trial Today Learn More About Compliance Compliant EHR Software CARF HIPAA HITECH Act Joint Commission Meaningful Use Medicare Medicaid Compliant EHR Software MIPS What Is the Joint Commission. The Joint Commission, or JCAHO, is an independent, nonprofit organization that provides accreditation and certification to a wide variety of healthcare organizations and their programs. JCAHO operates in the United States and upholds a nationally recognized seal of approval for over 22,000 healthcare organizations around the country. This seal attests to the organizations commitment to the highest quality of care and safety. The Joint Commission is committed to improving the standards of healthcare operations, so the public receives a higher quality of treatment, care, value and expertise. They believe in leading the way to zero, which means zero harm, falls, complications of care, infections and lost revenue. Eliminating harm of any kind is their goal. The Joint Commission reviews healthcare organizations in areas such as ambulatory health care, behavioral health care, laboratories, hospitals and even home care. Within specific categories, programs can earn Joint Commission certification. <http://www.bouwbedrijfansing.nl/userfiles/777-300er-manual.xml>

These programs include comprehensive cardiac care, disease-specific care, healthcare staffing services and palliative care. Why the Joint Commission Is Important for Behavioral and Mental Health The Joint Commission is well-respected in the behavioral health sector and covers topics like chemical dependency, substance abuse and addictive behaviors such as gambling. JCAHOs Professional and Technical Advisory Committee, which helps determine standards, includes members from expert organizations such as the American Psychiatric Association, the National Association for the Mentally Ill and the National Council for Community Behavioral Healthcare. When it comes to informed, science-based standards that reflect a national consensus, the Commission has it covered. Patients can see that your organization abides by high principles and reaches the recommendations of the experts in the field. While the accreditation alerts patients to the type of organization they are entrusting their health to, it also provides a learning opportunity for the practice. The accreditation process helps practices learn how to improve the health, safety and treatment of their patients. As they learn and change, the accreditation shows that they have adapted. Another benefit of becoming accredited is the potential improvements to a practice from a business standpoint. With standards that support efficient business operations, from documentation to procedures and individual rights, a provider can better avoid litigation, financial loss or patient injury. How Do Behavioral and Mental Health Providers Receive Joint Commission Accreditation. A provider interested in becoming accredited by The Joint Commission must start by applying. The application consists of documentation about various aspects of the practice, including ownership, demographics and detailed descriptions and locations of the services or programs offered.

After completing the application, a provider receives an account representative who will help coordinate the process. They will also receive a copy of the Comprehensive Accreditation Manual for Behavioral Health Care, or CAMBHC. The initial survey gets scheduled within 12 months of JCAHO receiving the application. The provider will have at least four weeks notice as to when the surveyors will be there. Surveyors are members of the behavioral health field and have hands-on knowledge of the environments they are reviewing. Resurveys occur unannounced every three years, with specific organizations receiving seven days notice. JCAHO produces the standards from the CAMBHC. This manual contains the resources for identifying requirements based on programs, populations, environments and more. CAMBHC has both individual and organization-focused standards. The individual-focused requirements include Infection Prevention and Control Medication Management Provision of Care, Treatment and Services Rights and Responsibilities of the Individual Record of Care, Treatment and Services Waiver Testing Organization-focused requirements include Emergency Management Environment of Care, Treatment or Services Human Resources Information Management Leadership Performance Improvement Life Safety Most Common Joint Commission Violations for Behavioral and Mental Health Providers JCAHO releases their most commonly cited standards each year, and safety-related violations tend to rank at the top. Be sure that the overall environment of your facility is safe for patients and staff by maintaining a proper fire extinguisher system and managing any utility system risks. To ensure that your practice receives and maintains compliance, you'll have to self-assess for adherence to the requirements. You can address many of these common problems through efficient information management systems, such as your electronic health record EHR.

An EHR can help providers develop their care and treatment plans to reach the individual patient more directly. EHRs provide intuitive charting and documentation over time to better assess the outcomes of treatment paths. Joint Commission Ethics Standards and EHR Compliance Factors A critical component of JCAHOs accreditation program is the organizations ethical performance. JCAHO posits that these organizations have several obligations to the patient that include preserving their dignity, privacy and rights. Involving the patient in more parts of their treatment and showing empathetic, trustworthy and professional behavior is also essential. An EHR can help or hurt a practice in meeting these standards. An EHR that is not secure or doesn't reach meaningful use criteria can harm the data and your patients. On the other hand, if an EHR benefits patients through advanced charting, security features and improved communication, it could help you better reach some JCAHO standards. Schedule a Live Demo Frequently Asked Questions About the Joint Commission How long does the accreditation process take. Collapse Many organizations plan for six to nine months for evaluation and policy implementation before surveyors arrive. How long is an accreditation good for. Expand JCAHO accreditation is good for three years, except for lab accreditations, which are valid for two years. What does accreditation cost. Expand Accreditation costs are divided across the three years with an annual fee, but there is a survey fee in the first year. The Joint Commission Compliance and EHRs Compliance with JCAHO can help an organization acquire and retain thirdparty patients and payments. The accreditation delivers a respected status and can help contribute to better professional partners and more patients. Choosing the right EHR can help get you there.

With intuitive charting, efficient and secure financial operations and a variety of features to improve the security and care of your patients, investing in a proper EHR can increase your chances of accreditation. ICANotes for Better Compliance For an EHR with the features needed for Joint Commission accreditation, providers turn to ICANotes. ICANotes can help your patients in several ways. Expansive digital charts, templates and patient information help providers fully understand their patients diagnoses and treatment at all stages of care. Well documented data improves communication across staff members and patients. You can also ensure you meet security requirements from both JCAHO and HIPAA with help from ICANotes robust security features, including individual user authentication, access controls, audit trails and alarm and event reporting. We have had many questions from readers on this topic and are working with several clients who are considering this new certification. So, we are devoting this issue of our newsletter to answering those questions and providing information about Behavioral Health Homes and the new TJC Behavioral Health Home Certification. The creation of Health Homes became an option for states under the Affordable Care Act. The target population is Medicaid enrollees with multiple chronic health conditions including mental health and substance abuse disorders.

In order to be eligible for Behavioral Health Home services, the Medicaid enrollee must have the following. Thus far, there are 12 states that have submitted health home State Plan Amendments that have been approved by CMS: Alabama, Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Missouri, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, Washington, and Wisconsin. Several others are in the process of submitting State Plan Amendments.

Colocated Partnership Model The BH organization arranges for health care providers to offer some basic primary physical health care services onsite at the BH organization.

Facilitated Referral Model The BH organization has processes in place to ensure the coordination of primary physical health care provided offsite. It is for organizations that are providing integrated primary physical health care and behavioral health care.

Behavioral Health Home Certification will be available as of January 1, 2014. This includes organizations that are accredited solely under the BH standards as well as those that are accredited under both the BH standards and another accreditation manual such as the Hospital Accreditation manual. For example, a community mental health center with inpatient beds that is accredited under both Hospital standards and BH standards would be eligible for Behavioral Health Home Certification. They were included in the October 2013 CAMBHC Update 2 that was mailed to accredited organizations last month. Some of the Behavioral Health Home requirements were added to existing standards by creating new elements of performance. Other requirements are addressed by new standards that were created specifically for Behavioral Health Homes. The team has a Team Coordinator. Does this mean that we will automatically meet the Behavioral Health Home Certification requirements Standard CTS.04.02.19 covers primary physical health services provided directly by the organization and CTS.04.02.21 covers primary physical health services provided through a referral agreement with a primary physical health provider. These standards are addressed through the current survey process. The Behavioral Health Home Certification requirements go beyond these existing standards and recognize organizations that are acting as a health home to provide integrated and coordinated primary physical health care and behavioral health care. This can be a defined subset of the population such as consumers living in a particular geographic area, consumers who are Medicaid enrollees, consumers with a particular diagnosis, etc. This state recognition will help behavioral health care organizations meet Medicaid requirements and, as a result, may improve an organizations reimbursement structure. Based on that research, determine if you organization is well positioned to pursue this certification. If so, contact us to arrange for training and technical assistance on achieving Behavioral Health Home Certification.
